The U S Department of Health & Human Services
Creighton University Department of Medicine and Health Sciences Continuing Education Operations

Designed For: Physicians, Physician Assistants, Nurses, Healthcare Educators, Residents, Students, Public Health professionals, other interested healthcare providers and members of the public.
PURPOSE AND OBJECTIVES

Purpose: The conference will educate researchers, clinicians, humanists, and members of the public regarding the benefits of research on human tissue while highlighting the connections between trust, trustworthiness, and research integrity.

Objectives: At the completion of this conference the participants should be able to:
- Weigh the social benefits of medical knowledge derived from tissue research against competing moral goods such as the protection of cultural traditions and beliefs as well as protection from exploitation.
- Examine the concept of trust, particularly from the perspective of marginalized populations and its importance in the research enterprise.
- Identify gaps in knowledge and values between the science community and the public regarding the use of human tissue.
